Infrastructure on our public roads and highways needs to be fixed before we ever unleash autonomous trucks and allow technology companies on the road and put hundreds of not thousands of truck drivers and the industry out of work and millions of Americans lives at risk. Americans need to learn how to drive around trucks before autonomous vehicles are ever on the roadways. In a real world situation, driverless vehicles would be a threat to lives until people learn how to drive around trucks today. Unless we are dedicating a new interstate system to driverless trucks, this is a technology that is too far off to be a realistic goal.
