

Stephen Dowdy - Comments

It's just common sense. You need a driver to drive a truck. There are too many variables that driverless trucks can't handle. Such as weather. Road conditions, traffic. There has already been deaths associated with driverless cars. Take that x10 if a truck is involved. Let alone the possibility of terrorist hacking into the truck.