The proposal is very open and allows for oversight, while still allowing the technology to be tested and deployed. The one concern is that more could be done to educate the public on the ML/AI and sensor systems. From reading other comments posted it is clear that there is a general misunderstanding. As an example, a direct quote from another comment, "It's sensors only see what, 75 feet away." This is obviously not accurate and shows the level of understanding the public has. There is also confusion on to how a software system could/would make decisions in complicated environments. Better educating the public could help them to understand system limitations and capabilities.
