

George Kincaid - Comments

It is of my opinion that automated driving systems are not in the best interest of safety. Nothing can take the place of a well trained driver to safely operate a vehicle. I've seen current lane departure warning systems, automatic braking systems, etc., be thrown off by lines on the road, mailboxes, and similar issues. Computers and sensors invite glitches and malfunctions. I believe efforts would be better spent on better training for human drivers and not wasted on unpredictable and error prone technology.