

Comment from Chris Enns

Autonomous vehicles dont belong on public roads. This is dangerous technology. Tesla and Uber have already killed innocent people with it but still free to do whatever they want. If implemented they will need people with MORE training to control them than a standard cdl holder. Hours of service should stay the same if the eld is meant to make competition fair then they cant relax rules for this. They will always need a human to check vehicle while on trips. Anything can happen at anytime from a dragging brake that would cause the trailer to start on fire to wheel nuts loosening up and losing wheels on the highway, these things can happen in a matter of minutes and be catastrophic. Multiple checks of truck and trailer are performed every time it is stopped n driver gets out to make sure everything is ok.. This technology is promising to take away jobs and its not even proven. I believe its a terrible idea and huge liability. This is a case of profits over people and that is a dangerous game.