

Allan Reigert - Comments

The entire idea of a 80,000 pound truck driving on a public highway with no one at the wheel is absurd. The technology is unreliable at best. They can't even get cell phones to work 100% of the time. The computer can't possibly do what a human driver can. Someone hundreds of miles away won't be able to address any issues.

There should always be a qualified and properly trained human awake at the controls. That person should be held to all regulations including those. No exceptions.

Even Captain Picard had someone at the controls of the enterprise!