

Comment from Gary Junell

Trying to determine in my mind as to when a manufacture decides an item is defective / dangerous & should be recalled as to why the party (General Motors) that used this defective item has the ability to decide that it is not a safety issue. Only reason I can determine is financial that General Motors would be out a small amount of their Millions of Dollars Profit. Lives lost or lives ruined from the defect is minimal as they are concerned. GM says that they do not see a concern, but feel that it is safe to drive this vehicle with a defective airbag that might explode, but maybe not.

So lets take the gamble that the owners / occupants wont be mangled or killed! Takata the manufacture that states its defective & could injure or kill is wrong. I know recalls are expensive for GM & if they get by without a major lawsuit due to injury or death, they are money ahead. I'm not a gambler when it comes to harming family or friends.

Would really like to see something resolved.

Concerning

NHTSA-2016-0124

Not sure if this was the form to send this statement on, if not please supply correct form.

Thank You