

Comment from John Stock

This is an excellent idea that is long overdue! Not only will cameras eliminate "blind spots", but they will also allow the driver to see what is going on around their vehicle much better during inclement weather such as rain and snow. A heavy rain makes it difficult to see clearly through the window to look at a mirror, while a frosted over or snow covered window makes it almost impossible to see out of. A camera (with a heating element, just like mirrors commonly have, would allow for much greater safety just by virtue of the driver actually being able to clearly see their surroundings.