

Comment from Ann Soltis

I fully support ensuring that "quiet" vehicles be rendered safe so that people and animals can hear them approaching. However, allowing a variety of sounds would be dangerous and add to the already overly-noise-polluted environment we live in.

* The sounds should be standard so that when someone or something hears the sound, they know that it is a car.

* The sound should be loud enough to alert others, but not unduly loud - again - to avoid contributing further to the noise pollution that permeates the environment.