Not only do most people who choose to drive EVs do so to help the CO2 footprint, but also do so because we like peace and quiet.

If now EV drivers will be required to have louder cars (infringing on our right to choose our car) because people walk around with their heads in their phones, I think other car noise rules should be enforced as well.

For example, the fact that Harley davidson motorcycle drivers are allowed to make an enormous amount of noise without any regulations to control that, is startling. The motorcycle drivers even wear ear plugs and the rest of us have to suffer the noise they cause.

Please creat a maximum sound regulation to protect the hearing health of people and decrease the city noise. Otherwise let EV drivers have quiet cars. You cannot have unilateral rules like this when too much noise can be a health hazard and more damaging than the occasional EV accident because someone wasn't paying attention while walking.
