

Comment from Anna Wheeler

I feel that GM is showing that they do not care if manufactures that are not American based show more concern for their customers than them. We own a Toyota, a ford and a GM. Toyota is diligent in their concern to have the faulty airbags replaced even if the chance that they will not explode. Ford shows their due diligence as well. GM shows that they are more concern with profit versus safety. We do not drive the GM and if it is decided that the airbags due not need to be recalled we will be selling it. We have already determined GM will no longer get our business and have already started educating the next two generations in regards to GM business practice and educating them to do business with Ford or even an overseas manufacture. No bailout when you fail this time GM.