I believe that cameras to be used as replacements for physical mirrors is a great, and innovative solution! We have seen this kind of legislation passed in the EU and Japan, and they don't seem to have very many problems with it! The future is bright, and I think this a great step forward. Not only would it allow for cars like the Audi e-tron to be sold here in america, which would allow for more jobs, but also stoke competition in the EV space for greater advancements, which could entice manufacturers to produce more items here in the United States. I do think that there should be some regulations surrounding this technology, but it definitely should be looked into!
