

Comment from Will Sophie

Autonomous cars have been an interest of mine for quite some time. The question that eats at me most is who will be liable in the event of a crash? Car insurance would still be viable, but those who do not own car insurance, yet own an autonomous vehicle, are they liable for damages or is the car manufacturer? Since the car itself got in the crash with no direction from the owner, wouldn't it be the fault of the manufacturer? To put it concisely, who must pay for damages when a car with no manual apparatuses is at fault?