I believe we need to keep with new technology and technology acceptance. Over the last century we've witnessed many automotive tech milestones, always an improvement over yesterdays' ideas. The time has come to embrace this idea, certainly with standards regarding reliability, high pixel count, night vision, etc. Paramount is the concept that the rear view cameras should be in operation anytime someone is in the drivers' seat. Since June 18th, 2016 the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe has already approved rear view cameras. The US is ready for this. It's absolutely inevitable, as sure as transitioning from horse buggies to Model T's. Please, let's not resist this leap in technology.
