What happens when the tech fails and now people have no outside views any more because there is no more functional cameras? I would not be able to drive any more if I had to rely on cameras and video views exclusively. I'm one of those people unable to play most video games (makes me physically ill) and cannot even make use of the fancy rear view screens and rear-view inside mirror screens in some more premium cars. If this becomes allowable, there better be an option for traditional mirrors for when the tech fails and for that part of the population that cannot safely make use of it.
