Me personally I feel as if making light duty vehicles can make a change in climate change but that's just a small step. Other countries might not take this step and considering the fact that the United States also have a lot of factories that put out a lot of ash and bad air for the earth it won't help with the change of climate by just only focusing on vehicles. I also look at and think that the earth does evolve and so do people so this could be a case that the earth hasn't evolved yet to be able to survive off of what we are doing to it.
