Why is it that it seems to many of us that NHTSA is actively trying to get rid of trucking altogether. The AEB systems will be picking up on many things that it will identify as objects and slam on the brakes. In the winter months, this could be a direct cause of jackknifing and injury or death (depending on where it happens) to, not only the driver, but the general public as well. If it were to happen while going down a steep grade, it may cause the brakes to fail completely. Please think this through before you implement such an idiotic idea.
