If one group commits traffic crimes at greater rates, that group should be prosecuted. It has nothing to do with racism. illegal immigrants are actually much less likely than native-born Americans to be arrested or convicted for violent crimes or property crimes, such as homicide and larceny. In addition to these types of crimes, drunk driving also poses a hazard to the lives of native-born Americans. TOne of the few studies of impaired driving among illegal immigrants surveyed 467 recent Hispanic immigrants to Miami-Dade County, Florida.⁸ Of those 467 respondents, 67 were illegal immigrants. The study found that illegal immigrants drink more than legal immigrants and are less knowledgeable about DUI and DWI laws but that they are much less likely to be involved in DUIs and DWIs because they desire to avoid interactions with law enforcement officers and so will flee the scene, resulting in hit and runs instead of DUI / DWI charges. Another study focusing on DUI and DWI traffic stops near the U.S.-Mexico border found that binge drinking is more common along the border. The 2010 DUI-related felony murder of Benedictine nun Sister Denise Mosier and the 2018 death of Indianapolis Colts linebacker Edwin Jackson, both of whom were killed in car accidents caused by illegal immigrant drunk drivers, justify those warnings. Hispanics in the United States generally have higher rates of DUI and DWI and so should be prosecuted accordingly.
