I am unalterably opposed to the implementation of "smart" anti-drunk-driving technology and will not purchase any vehicles having it because I refuse to have every aspect of my life monitored in a police state putting "1984" to shame. Apart from this, the increased cost of the technology will make new vehicles even more unaffordable than they are already. What will come next - the required retrofitting of older vehicles with this because of consumer refusal to purchase vehicles with this feature? It's already been made clear to me that we no longer live in a nation of laws so it would not surprise me in the least.

Sincerely,

Joseph Shala
